Fun facts of the birds that talk

Have you ever heard a bird talking like a person?

My sister used to keep a parrot as her pet, and every time I went to her house, I always got confused who was the one speaking. The parrot was named Mika, and she knew so many sentences, such as "Hello, baby!" "When are you going to take a shower?" and "Have you eaten yet?" .

She can sing songs, say sentences, and even dance. What an interesting bird!

I was curious about if those talking birds could really understand the meanings of the sentences, so I did a little research on the internet.

The fact is that those birds might understand some sentences, but most of the time, they are just repeating the sounds we make. When little birds are born, they hear the sounds from other birds of their group. They start to learn how to sound to fit into a group. That's why Mika always spoke like a human.

1. Which of the following does "they" refer to?

- (A) Other birds in the group.
- (B) Newborn birds.
- (C) Parrots.

2. What can we learn from Wendy's blog?

- (A) Parrots might not understand the meanings of the words they say.
- (B) Parrots can make sentences themselves.
- (C) Parrots don't like to live with other birds.

3. Why do those talking birds repeat what we say?

- (A) To make people laugh.
- (B) To be a member of us.
- (C) To learn how to speak like humans.
